Why is my friend sending me “shocking” content and how do I stop it? I have a friend that I have known since we were kids. She is now in her early 20s, she’s a smart, great, girl. In the past, she has told me that she is straight, but that she has been in love with a guy that she is now dating. In the past, there was a period when we weren’t in touch that time, and after talking to her on Facebook a few weeks ago, we decided to talk. At first, we just talked about fun stuff that we both do and how we’ve been doing since the past year. The last two conversations have been off topic. She started messaging me about a month ago. Before this, I had even messaged her about the topic we had talked about in the last conversation I had. She responded with “I just don’t know how to tell my boyfriend” and I didn’t want to be a jerk about it. Then in the past week, it got a little awkward, she was hitting me up on Instagram on her own, without me messaging her first. I asked her if she wanted to hang out, but she said no and unfriended me. I then hit her up with a “hey, I’m sorry” message and she told me that she just didn’t want to be my friend anymore. How do I understand her? She’s an adult, she should get the right to do what she wants. I’m taking her behaviors as all sign of disrespect, but am I justified? “I just don’t know how to tell my boyfriend”: You didn’t tell her because you don’t want to be her friend anymore. That’s the only reason. I mean, it’s obviously very disrespectful, but if you didn’t want to be her friend, why did you friend her in the first place? I’m not saying she’s right, but you don’t deserve to get punished for telling her no. I would probably do the same thing if I was in her shoes. I’m sorry, but no. I don’t care that you are an adult and you should get to do what you want. You
