Advw-80a15d1602.jar $ $ . . . A: Your questions are a bit vague. But I'll try to give you some pointers. How does Windows XP have more processes than Windows 8? A program might have a few processes running for a few reasons. To use less memory, to use less CPU, or for code that is running in the background for the program to do its work. No I want the link.exe run with higher priority. You will need to change your permissions for the program. Start taskmgr and open the task manager and do a recursive list of the programs and see if they are using elevated prio, if so there is no quick fix. is it possible to change this values or need to change them on.exe The executable may not have the appropriate permissions for the change you wish to make. If the executable is owned by an Administrator (the username = Administrator) you can't change permissions. If the executable is owned by a standard user, you can change permissions, but you will need to be a member of the Administrators group. If you have administrative rights you can modify the executable by using the Users and Groups tool. Alternatively, you could change the default owner or access permission for all programs to something that works for you. For example, if you don't need administrative privileges on programs you can open each program, and grant yourself permissions to execute it. If you do not do this, or if the owner of the program does not want you to execute it, you can change the owner of the executable. You can do this, by right clicking on the executable and going to 'Open' then Edit permissions... You may also be able to use group admins, or change the ownership group of the program.
