While this may be a fair and even just complaint, it will not solve the problem of poverty. And less than a year later, an entire district in Cameroon was bombed by Boko Haram. The devastation was so terrible that the mosque was bombed to the ground. In the wake of all of this, there was a lot of outrage. In fact, a petition was signed by members of Congress to support this, and even had the support of Barbra Streisand. There is a movement to force these countries to listen to the people there, and the easy solution is for the media to pressure the government into listening to the people. If the media did this, all of the problems would be solved. Of course, that would mean most of the people in those countries would be very upset, because they would become poorer, which really wouldn't be a problem. In fact, the rich would become much richer with all of the money that we could all save.
